HOMES BRIGHTENED.

For the magnificent response to the appeal for help for the poor made by the benevolent readers of this paper THE HERALD returns the thanks of the unfortunate ones whose gloomy homes were brightened by the visits of the Rev. Mr. Frye yesterday afternoon. The contributions were greatly more numerous than was anticipated. The cash donations indicate that the hearts of the truly charitable are not closed to the cry of distress, while the three wagon loads of provisions and clothing bespeak the noble impulses of the city's benevolent ones. The houses visited yesterday were those of persons whose destitute condition is not the result of improvidence nor dissipation. They are honorably poor, humbled by adverse circumstances, and compelled to receive in gratitude that which they would cheerfully give were fortune to smile on them. They were not lusty men in the vigor of manhood too lazy to work and without shame or pride. Not outcast women struggling amid the breakers of retributive adversity. Not healthy children of spendthrift parents. The men were the uncompensated victims of wasting disease, whose faces were lit up with gratitude and heavenly thankfulness when their empty cupboards were replenished by the hand of unknown charity. The women were old and decrepit, whose froms of many years had been crippled; or else they were weakened and sickly beyond the power to earn a livelihood. Their wrinkled faces and fear-dampened cheeks betrayed the emotions they tried to conceal when THE HERALD basket of supplies was placed in a chair by their sides. The children were the little ones of poverty, whose pale faces contrasted sharply with the meagre surroundings of the bare walls and bare floors of desolate homes. Their innocent prattle was interrupted by the call of Sweet Charity only to break into childish shouts of joy when their eyes rested upon the brown doughnuts, the vegetables and meats that had long been strangers to their plates. To witness these transformations from anticipations of joyless and superfluous futilities to happy and joyous realizations of plenty to stay the pangs of hunger and gladden the heart is all sufficient to reward those who distributed the necessities. To those who contributed, reward will come in the knowledge that their mites are like "apples of gold in pictures of silver" in the eight homes made happy yesterday afternoon. The work will proceed until there shall be no case of actual hunger in this prosperous city. Contributions of groceries, provisions and fuel are needed. There is an abundant supply of clothing. The wagon will be sent out again early tomorrow morning.

BUT ONE OPINION.

There can be no two opinions concerning the trouble between the faculty and students at Ann Arbor, growing out of the Griffin affair. The authority of the faculty and the dignity of the university must be sustained whether there is a single student remaining in the law department or not. The present fracas is clearly a matter in which the authority of the faculty is absolute. The lectures are the property of the university, as clearly as the books in the library. If the faculty decides that those lectures shall not be written in full and sold, there is no more ground for questioning their decision than when they declare that books shall not be taken from the library. A large number of students have championed Griffin's cause; but if the faculty ever retreats from the position it has assumed, it will be a virtual admission that it has no right to establish rules for the government of the University, and the institution itself must suffer from such an admission of weakness.

ARCTIC EXPLORATIONS.

Nearly every year an expedition is dispatched to the Polar regions for the purpose of exploration. Just what practical results are to follow the explorations are conveniently clothed in doubt. We know all we probably ever shall know of those bleak, frigid regions already. The splendors of the aurora borealis, the colossal masses of impenetrable ice and the intensity of the cold wave been pictured in endless narratives, supplemented by harrowing tales of the suffering, starvation and death of those who constituted the parties. What matter it to the world if the north pole is never seen by human eyes? What matter if the south pole is in the center of an Antarctic continent? No human eye withstand the severity of the climate at either end of the world. Whether there is an open sea or an unbroken field of ice at the one end and fathomless glaciers and towering mountains of fixed ice at the other will never be known until the inventive genius of man shall construct a flying machine that may be warmed, lighted and propelled while the explorers sail away and above the immovable barriers in the pathway of navigation. It is gratifying to notice therefore that the latest contemplated folly, Nordenfjeld's expedition to explore the Antarctic regions, has been given up. He offered to pay $25,000 for the purpose of making the trip if the Australians would raise $50,000; but the Australians not caring to know more than Wilkes and Ross have already made known, declined to put up that amount or any other. The ambition of some explorers has been to discover a passage, the Northwest passage, whereby a route might be established for the Pacific commerce that would save the twenty thousand miles voyage around the Horn. But it has been conclusively demonstrated that if there were a score of such passages, the risk and danger of sailing through them would be so great that they never would be used.

KARNE NOT BIG ENOUGH.

When the senators and representatives from the west, representing the farmers and mine owners, shall arrange and classify the multitude of schemes now lying dormant in their massive intellects it will be difficult to find room on the earth for the remainder of the people not included in their constituencies. They want the whole earth and will propose the right kind of legislation to secure it. Whiskers Peffer's eagle eye extended to Indiana, and detecting that a big loan appropriation would alleviate financial stringency among the farmers of Hoosierdom at once submitted a bill for their relief. Of course he did not know what did he care? That like measure would be hailed with delight by the squaw man of Oregon and the squatters of his own state. Senator Dolph next comes forward with a proposition to appropriate $100,000,000 for coast defenses, out of which the Pacific coast is expected to take the lion's share to the exclusion of the east. Now comes Senator Teller who has no idea of being left in the general distribution of the public swag. He engineered a scheme through congress to endow a school of mines in Colorado. The project was questioned and the doughty senator rose in his dignity and declared that Colorado was the place and the school was necessary for the place, whereupon the appropriation was doubled and speedily passed. Senator Teller and his colleagues do not know what did they care? that the state of Michigan maintain at its own expense a mining school the practical benefits from which, although a first-class school, are so indistinct and uncertain as to provoke ridicule. Senator Stanford also has a wild and visionary scheme to create a 2 per cent. bureau under which the government shall act as a paternalist. What is to be done with these legislators when their plates are completed? Another earth and several planets will be necessary to satiate their greed. It is probable, however, that a sensible majority in both houses will shatter their plates and hopes.

BABY ACTORS.

Nearly every traveling dramatic company has among its cast a child artist. These little ones display a great deal of precocity while before the footlights and the admiring audiences at breathless to catch the faintest whisper of wit or to observe the slightest movement of grace. Infatigable prodigies have taken an advanced position in the profession, and old-time actors and actresses are more or less disturbed because the public demand for them seems to be more pronounced than for themselves. The competition is so keen at present that it is not surprising to find that precocious tots of 3 and 4 years of age are sent out upon the stage to sing operatic selections or to dance the Spanish skirt pirouettes. In some cases the exhibitions are positively painful to many, yet the great unthinking majority of theater patrons applaud the child and insist upon its reappearance. In one of the local theaters a little girl is appearing this week whose efforts to sing and dance and say cute things to provoke laughter are distressing rather than amusing, and yet the audiences invariably applaud her to the echo. Of course it is unfair to say that all stage children are harshly treated or taxed beyond the capacity of their endurance, yet the tendency toward exhibiting their remarkable talents, when they exist, has about reached the limit, and a check must be put upon it, or soon we shall be invited to witness a presentation of Hamlet by four-year-old tragedians and a two-year-old cady. Lillian Russell, in defending the stage children, says that in her company the children are always treated with the greatest consideration. In all companies of first rank children are made much of it is true, but their lives are not always filled with sunshine and play. The rehearsal and the performance take away much of the child's physical strength and vigor, and unquestionably weaken the mind. The moral influence of stage life is not calculated to improve the young mind.

FRANK CHARGE SUSTAINED.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 30.—A decree of the judge in the case of Daniel M. Burns, republican leader in California, in which is involved the ownership of the Candelaria mine, was issued yesterday. The decree is that the documents presented are sufficient to prove the location of the mine made by Burns, and Burns was placed at the disposal of the federal authorities.

WARSHIP VICTORIA ASHORE.

LOSPEX, Jan. 30.—A dispatch from Athens says that H. M. S. Victoria, one of the most powerful ships in the British navy, is ashore in a dangerous position on the Greek coast. It is said that H. M. S. Edinburgh and a number of tugs and lighters have left Malta in order to try to pull the Victoria off. H. M. S. Victoria is the flagship of the Mediterranean squadron.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY AT GOHAM.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Jacob Somborn shot and seriously injured his cousin, Julius Somborn, the well known wine merchant, today, at the latter's office, No. 67 Broad street, and then shot himself dead.

Jacob, who has long been a pensioner of his wealthy cousin, called at the latter's office this afternoon and made a demand for money, but was refused. Thereupon he drew a revolver from his pocket and fired a shot into the stomach of Julius. The wounded man fell just as Jacob fired another shot, the second ball going through a wooden partition. The clerk in the office, attracted by the shot, summoned an officer, but before they could apprehend Jacob he had shot himself in the mouth, dying instantly.

BOTH GIRLS INDICTED.

MENOMONIE, Jan. 30.—The grand jury report a true bill today against Alice Mitchell and Lillie Johnson, charging them with the murder of Freda Ward. The indictment of Miss Johnson is a surprise, as she did nothing more than accompany Miss Mitchell to the court house in a buggy. A member of the jury says, however, that she was aware of the Mitchell girl's intention. The two culprits will be arraigned next Monday.

EXPLODING FOR GYPSUM.

ST. IGNACE, Mich., Jan. 30.—A party of gentlemen from Marquette and vicinity arrived here Thursday, and after providing themselves with camp supplies and equipments started forth to prospect for gypsum deposits on lands recently purchased by a syndicate near this city. Drilling on various portions of the tract will be resorted to, and if gypsum is found to exist in paying quantities extensive operations in the development of the deposit will be begun in the spring.

LABORERS MAY STRIKE.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 30.—A strike of the laborers about the state capital is among the possibilities. They have petitioned the state board of auditors to increase their meager salaries of $1.50 each per day, but have received little satisfaction. The board referring the petition to Engineer Guy. The engineer is trying to adjust matters and the threatened walk out has been postponed a few days.

CYRUS W. FELD VERY LOW.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Cyrus W. Field's physician said today that his patient was in a critical condition, but that all hope had not yet been abandoned. There was a slight improvement last night, but this morning he was weaker again and the physicians held a consultation. The venerable capitalist still retains control of his faculties, but is greatly worn. His permanent recovery is very doubtful.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Jan. 30.—Joseph Ufford, employed on the construction of the new docks here, was yesterday killed by falling coal. The deceased was a single man and from Meadford, Utah.

THE PRESENT SEASON WILL SHOW MORE FINE DRESSES THAN HAVE EVER APPEARED IN WASHINGTON BEFORE.

A great number of the gowns of the wives of our senators and diplomats were made in Paris last summer, and you may see a dozen Worth's dresses at the most ordinary reception. There is scarcely a lady of prominence who has not an almost entirely new wardrobe, and the cost of the clothes at any white house gathering now runs high into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Mrs. President Harrison has a number of handsome new gowns, and she wore a very fine one on New Year's day. It was made for that occasion, and it consisted of a rich pomegranate satin embroidered in bright bouquets in natural tints, opening over a front petticoat of canary satin. This had a deep broad border with draperies of amber and embroidered lace, and the slight V-shaped opening at the throat was filled in with the lace and fastened with a handsome diamond pin and pendant. At this same reception Mrs. McKee brought out one of the new gowns which she had made in Paris last summer. It was a princess of white satin brocaded in velvet, with a design of rose petals. The sleeves were full and the bodice trimmings were of pink chiffon. A wide sash of pale blue moire was fastened to the front at the left side in a big bow, and this had long floating ends. Mrs. McKee has a number of other fine gowns which she got in Europe, and the most of these are to be worn with a broad sash and two wing-like bows at the back. Among Mrs. Harrison's new gowns, which she will bring out later in the season, is of her toilet. A woman of fine personal appearance and devoted to social life, she each season presides over her father's handsome house at the capital with a grace and attraction that renders it one of the most charming among social centers. Mrs. White has but recently returned to the city, and has not as yet unpacked the larger portion of her wardrobe. Among the list of those already noticeable is a handsome carriage dress of golden brown cloth, trimmed with white and trimmed with ostrich tips. This has a long close-fitting bodice of the same and hat and feathers to match, and the combination makes a very stylish and simple evening costume. A very beautiful evening dress is of pearl-white satin brocaded in bow knots of delicate blue forget-me-nots with their green leaves. A broad band of velvet is fastened around the waist with a big bow at the back; the low-neck bodice is trimmed with sprays of forget-me-nots and lace. A handsome carriage dress, conspicuous for simple elegance, is of brown and white trimmed with ostrich feathers. This has a long bodice and full skirt with feathers to correspond. A variety of other equally rich toilets will later be worn by the possessor, whose artistic taste is not only noticeable in her gown, but in the beautiful furnishing and unrivaled decorations of her father's home, one of the most beautiful interiors in our city of handsome residences. The bride of Gen. Schofield has many elegant new gowns, most of them ordered from New York, that for taste and rich simplicity will outrival some of the newly-imported toilets. Already Mrs. Schofield has had occasion to don a variety of limerocks and dinner dresses upon the numerous occasions during the anti-official entertainments given in her honor. One of her pret-one of sage-green brocade with a vest of rose pink embroidered crepe, and another of Mrs. McKee's is a steel gray silk, the waist of which has a tablier effect of Irish point.

Mrs. Wilmerding, the widowed daughter of the secretary of the navy, appeared on New Year's for the first time at a public reception since the sad tragedy which a year ago visited the home of Secretary Tracy and within a few moments laid in ruins not only his hearthstone, but deprived him of his wife and daughter at one fell blow. Though sadly broken by the terrible trial, Mrs. Wilmerding has bravely smothered her own grief and for the sake of her father and child again assumed the obligations of her position. Her appearance among the ladies of the cabinet at the white house was a source of sincere pleasure to all, not one of whom but fully appreciated the self-sacrifice of the brave effort. This made Mrs. Wilmerding's gown of white point de voile, trimmed with simple ruffles of chiffon, bespeak the mourning garb, yet evidence the delicacy of her sorrow in the eyes of the world.

Mrs. Romero, the wife of the Mexican minister, wears an enviable popularity among Washington hostesses. She recently spent six months abroad, during which time she visited all the capitals of the east, and brought with her upon her return several large trunk loads of superb toilet articles purchased in London, Paris and Constantinople. Among her elegant Parisian toilets is a dinner dress of heliotrope satin, with long court train, the entire skirt elaborately embroidered in rines and blossoms in cut steel and iridescent paste-mounter, thickly studded with jewels. The high bodice is trimmed with a fall of lace about the curved opening at the neck and down the front, a ruffle of the same edging the bodice, the whole elegant in its rich simplicity. Another most unique and tasteful gown was purchased in the east. It is a Turkish costume such as is worn by ladies of high rank. The material is a delicate white silk with elaborate embroidery in gold, the figure is being predominant among the Egyptian figures of the border and gold and blue crescents scattered over the surface. She has also a dress jacket of white brocade heavily embroidered in gold, and tied with gold cord and tassels over a shirred tight-fitting waist. One of her handsome reception dresses is of dark sage-green corded silk, brocaded in stripes of roses and white lilies, the high cut bodice elaborately trimmed with Spanish lace edged with a fall of lace about the hips. An elegant visiting costume of sagegreen satin merveilleuse, combined with embroidered panels of richly colored birds poised among rose vines. The postillion blouse, with square cut tails, trimmed with a broad band of velvet ribbon, forming a loose belt, with long floating ends at the back, high leg-of-mutton sleeves of velvet of the same shade, and modestly high round collar with a jabot of black lace at the throat, completes a most superb costume.

Mrs. Howard Gamson White, of Utica, N. Y., daughter of Senator Sawyer, is distinguished among Washington hostesses for the richness and elegance tiest gown is of white brocade figured in tiny pink daisies. The skirt and bodice are in one, made with short baby waist with a wide fall of French lace around the neck, and the elbow sleeves are of point d'esprit with ruffles of the lace and capped with the brocade. A broad belt of seed pearls forms a point at the back and front, and a fall of the lace is slashed across with the new gown, being bell-shaped with a narrow quilling around the bottom.

CERTAIN MRS. TRUSTER.

"But why are you so very anxious to see a whale, Mrs. Truster?" asked the captain, after the lady had asked for the twentieth time if one was in sight. "I want so much to see one blubber, captain. It must be very impressive to see such a large creature cry,"—Harper's Weekly.
